What's New in the AlfaMini?

AlfaMini is a full featured desktop timer, countdown and clock for Linux and Windows. Features:
The whole functionality is realized using GTK+ and C++. It has a useful but not too heavy skin. It can show several different time sources. It supports several modes: Countdown with interval, countdown with days, week and month, timespans, alex mode (ascii output), etc. Timer (timeout) and Alt-Timeout (timeout with beeps) Monochrome and color (ascii) display It's written with love and simplicity in mind and it is good to show it to people.

AlfaMini is not very visible. It is designed for users with low resources usage, so, if you don't want to use it you can set the default settings to the lowest value in the CCSM panel. This article covers installation, manual, and Screenshots. Installation ----- Hint: If you like to use the binary, there is no need to unpack the tarball. Just install the binary, if you like to use the source, unpack the source and check out the content of the dir. (tar -xvf) All the code is licensed under GNU/LGPL3+ and the files are not included in any binary package. After unpacking you need to compile it. `./configure` `$ make` `$ sudo make install` For gcc, g++, `./configure` should compile and install the binaries.

Alternatively, you can go to the directory where you unpacked the files and do `./configure` `$ make` You need to download pango lib, font, timer and some UI files.

Unpack them and copy the files from the folder to the alfaminir folder. then cd to alfaminir/scripts/common $ wget $ tar xvf p
