It appears to be the closest thing to ad-free Spotify I can find. If you know of something that is similar but works without the need for an account, let me know. I could be really interested in a non-account-required ad-free Spotify. If you want to block all advertising, not just Spotify, the best solution is to use Firefox's Private Browsing mode. If you want to block ads from Spotify only, then I know of a solution that is actually working with Spotify 2.4 and does not require a premium account. If you disable the Spotify mobile apps, they don't request access to your microphone and camera when you use the app. Also, the audio ads are much less annoying than on other music streaming apps. I think I might still prefer it. Trying to install ad blocker and we have a message that adblock plugin is installed on my browser (Firefox), but it does not seem to be working. Is it a matter of the version of Firefox or is there any trick? I tried "disable Spotify mobile" but don't know what to do with the message. Should I change something in my firefox settings? With the latest version of Firefox, it should be as simple as clicking "Enable" on the ad blocker you want to use and then clicking "Ok" when prompted. If you don't see the dialog box or the enable button is grayed out
