[The side effects of steroid hormonal therapy. A psychiatric-psychologic study]. Fifty-nine patients with depressive disorders and treated with corticosteroids were evaluated by a psychiatrist and a psychologist before and after a course of therapy. A control group of 19 patients was also included. The history of psychiatric disorders showed that 40.7% of the depressed patients suffered from a psychiatric disorder before receiving corticosteroids. We found that depressed patients treated with corticosteroids presented with a higher score for apathy and irritability, and a lower score for obsessive-compulsive thoughts. A very important finding is the demonstration of apathy as a direct effect of corticosteroid therapy. The Wall of Fortune

The Wall of Fortune is a bronze sculpture depicting a ball of sorts, contained on the exterior of the Philadelphia Museum of Art, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, United States. Description The sculpture measures x and stands on x x blocks. It was cast from a clay model by José-Rodríguez Bernal. The subject was suggested by the nearby construction of the Eighth Street Viaduct. It was cast from a bronze mold of the clay model created in Bernal's studio in Mexico City. The sculpture was intended as the culmination of projects already begun in 1979 under the aegis of the Green. It represents a recurring theme: confluence of cultures, which is the main subject of Bernal's The Road to the Mind and of the Green's work. The title of the sculpture is significant to the title of the work represented, which is the novel Nevil Shute's The Case of the Midwife's Mistress, and which begins, "Yesterday was the day of the controversy over the female midwife, a controversy that had been brewing between the papacy and the Commonwealth of Elizabeth within the limits of the latter kingdom of England for thirty years. Suddenly, as a man, I was being led into the middle of it." The interactive dice wall In the summer of 1980, in conjunction with the TWA World Masters competition in New York City, the Wall of Fortune was transformed into an interactive dice wall. Taurian Yarousse created a "dice wall" structure—similar to the Wall of Doom in the London Science Museum and the Wall of Stones in New York's Museum of Modern Art (MoMA). The wall was 14' x 23' (4.2m x 6.
