Allows users to drag and drop files and folders into the Send File window. If you drag a file and then right-click a folder, a list of files within the folder opens up. Hold CTRL while you drag the files and folders and you can drag multiple files at once. Select multiple files in the list and right-click to send the files to your mobile phone. Support for USB transfer: If you connect the mobile phone to a computer using a USB cable, it will automatically enter the transfer mode. A USB selection mode appears on the bottom of the Send File window. If you drag a file into the Send File window, it will be transferred to the USB mode and transfer in the background. When done transferring, you can unplug your phone from the PC. Support for IrDA transfer: If you connect the mobile phone to a computer using IrDA (Infrared) transfer, it will automatically enter the transfer mode. An IrDA selection mode appears on the bottom of the Send File window. If you drag a file into the Send File window, it will be transferred to the IrDA mode and transfer in the background. When done transferring, you can unplug your phone from the PC. It's a pain, to say the least, to have to change your phone's settings everytime you need to transfer files. Thankfully, Sony-Ericsson SendFile makes it easy to transfer files with your cellphone. The program installs on your computer automatically when you connect your phone to it. You'll see the icon once connected, and you'll find the SendFile folder inside your phone's media folder. When you drag files to it, the transfer is immediately initiated and it shows up in the Sony-Ericsson folder on your computer. At that point, you can drag it to any directory to send it to your phone. With the release of this free program, Sony-Ericsson jumps headfirst on the MMS bandwagon, and their phone software really shows it. While other phones are still lagging on the MMS, the SendFile offers you the opportunity to send files to your phone with the click of a button. The program is easy to use, and it includes a set of options for easy copying of files. This program takes less than a minute to transfer a large number of files onto your phone. Basically, I have been involved in the business of mobile phones and information technology for almost 3 years. I am fascinated with technology. So, I always like to keep

Q: Generating a specific binary matrix as input to a LSTM I have a  $N$  by  $T$  number of video frames (where  $N > T$ ). I want to pass them through an LSTM for understanding the sequence of frames. Currently, I'm generating a  $T$  by 1 number of binary values (either 0 or 1) and then feeding them into the neural network. It is working fine, but I'd like to do it in a more efficient way, where I don't have to generate  $T * 1$  binary values. Instead, I'd like to generate a  $T$  by  $N$  binary matrix. Then feed the neural network with the matrix, and have it decide which row to be the one for that specific video frame. My question is, does the neural network automatically handle both sequences ( $T$  by 1, and  $T$  by  $N$ )? My intuition tells me it should be able to handle them without problems, but I'm not sure.

A: Since lstm accepts any input from one to multiple sequences, that should not be a problem. This invention relates to a process for producing aryl isocyanates and more specifically to the production of aniline isocyanates by an improved method. In the chemical industry, several methods have been proposed for the synthesis of aryl isocyanates, one being the reaction of phenyl chloroformate with anilines as described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,554,865. This is a fast and inexpensive process but suffers from a major drawback in that it produces two isocyanates rather than one, which could be separated using distillation techniques, at a disadvantage of high energy costs. Anilines may be nitrated to form aniline isothiocyanates which may be subsequently hydrolyzed. For example, aryl isothiocyanates are typically hydrolyzed by the addition of a water

What was once only a vocation for children is now being actively pursued by a growing group of adults as they seek a more creative and individual way to express their inner artistic urges. An interest in drawing, painting and drawing has seen a boom in popularity in recent years, with some individuals looking to paint, sketch, draw, craft, compose, design, sculpt and make their own works of art in a number of different mediums. Now, a recent study reveals that an interest in art is on the rise, with around one in five adults worldwide now saying that they are at least interested in drawing. The study, conducted by the British Association of Art Therapists (BAAT), surveyed some 6,300 adults in the UK,
