It was demonstrated that the expression of these fusion proteins, as well as that of their EGF-related cysteine-rich domain, were sufficient to transform cells and to serve as dominant oncogenes. Thus, the use of these EGF-related cysteine-rich domains as tumor-associated antigens has proven to be beneficial in augmenting immunological and cytotoxic recognition of tumors, and offers the prospect of enhanced immunotherapeutic success.Q: Refresh specific row in jtable from another jtable I have two jTable's on my class. First (defaultTable) is created by JFrame and displays a user database. Second (targetTable) displays information taken from (defaultTable). How can I refresh (re-create) the rows in targetTable depending on what the user has selected in defaultTable? A: on the event of selection in defaultTable then you set the corresponding data to be the selected row of targetTable.
