Farrell railway station Farrell railway station () serves the villages of Farrell and Llanrhos near Bridgend, on the Taff Vale Extension Line (TVE) of the Afan Valley Line, in Bridgend County Borough, Wales. The station is on the Barry Island Branch Line, which diverges from the TVE about half a mile from the station. History The station opened on 2 December 1893. It originally had two through platforms, each served by a single line. The station had facilities for a locomotive to serve the Taff Vale Extension Railway, but this was not provided until 1907. The station was closed to passengers on 5 February 1958, and to freight on 10 October 1960, when the Barry Island Branch Line ceased to operate. Trains were re-introduced to the Barry Island Branch Line on 23 July 1992. The station had two sidings on the Barry Island branch, which were opened in 1879. They were provided as passing loops, which enabled freight trains to pass through the station, without the need for passing signals. They were used mainly for handling coal until the closure of the station to passengers and freight in 1958. The sidings were retained, and the track layout was rationalised. The station has been unstaffed since closure, and no ticketing
