It's a fast file manager, it's lightweight and does not slow your computer down. Smart File System, a file system for Linux, was first released in June 2002 by Uwe Luehrs. It is a minimal operating system designed to provide secure access to personal data on a single personal computer or workstation. Smart File System is based on the concept of a 'filesystem in a file'. Instead of having directories and files as traditional operating system files, Smart File System provides access to the file system in a file, in a way similar to the way a real filesystem is accessed. UMove is a useful application that can recover, move or clone the Active Directory database in order to help you recover it from any source or backup. UMove is an easy to use utility that can make daily snapshots or clone the Active Directory (AD) database, even from a dead computer. It can back up and recover AD like no other utility. The problem, I am trying to solve is that we have a few hundred GB of data in our database that is related to the software package -

SharePoint. The organization and document structure for our SharePoint deployment is all but lost. The program that created the SharePoint database and the program that we use to recreate it when we add/remove software, etc are long gone. The data is still there, but we are looking for a way to recover it. There were a few SharePoint utilities on the market that had a decent recovery tool, but were targeted more towards a SharePoint user with no AD background. But, what we have here is a pretty unique situation. The data is not in a single SharePoint database, but spread among many Active Directory databases. I was wondering if anyone knew of any software that can help me do this? A: The question seems to indicate that the OP knows the program is gone and the data is lost. It also states that the OP doesn't want to use SharePoint. That leads me to believe the OP has SharePoint installed and is seeking an alternative for managing the SharePoint environment. If that's the case, it looks like he/she has some sort of back-up of the SYSVOL which will contain the AD-related portions. If that's the case, have you tried uninstalling SharePoint from the OP's computer(s)? I know you've also asked for something that can be run from a dead computer, but in that case you'll also need the SYSVOL to restore. If I am on the right track, I would recommend Ola's SysMover. It is a tool that can move the entire SYSVOL from one computer to another. It will handle any Active Directory related files. It also is designed to be run from a Live computer to move an Active Directory to a Live computer.
