Email This Story Clarkson is looking to add a few more pieces to their very promising basket. The New Hampshire Institute of Art has been awarded a $2,000 scholarship by the Pella Education Foundation in Iowa. The scholarship will cover all applicable tuition, fees and living costs for a student to attend and complete one year of academic studies at the Institute of Art. "It's a difficult decision, but I would have to think long and hard before saying no," Chancellor Chris Thomas said. "We want to make sure that the people we fund are going to be a great fit for the school. The Pella Scholarship is certainly one of the ways we ensure that." The chancellor says the decision was made in hopes of "enhancing the school and the students' chance of success." The recipient of the scholarship is supposed to be chosen randomly from all major candidates of course. While the scholarship is used for tuition, it cannot be used as part of the tuition fee. Clarkson estimates that the cost to attend the Institute of Art would total about $28,000. "By choosing to attend the Institute of Art, this student will be able to continue their art training at an extraordinary level," said Katherine G. Kelly, Executive Director of the Pella Education Foundation. "They will be able to prepare for future employment in a career in art. They will also be developing highly valuable life-long skills that will enhance their work in any career path." Clarkson is home to an art program and has a classroom space that could house 1cb139a0ed
