Q: Passing information in a custom CredentialProvider using Azure Active Directory My application uses a custom CredentialProvider implementation (with StravaAuth.e1_V1 as a subclass) to obtain an access token with LinkedIn, as described here. From that article, I have learned that the only information that I can pass to LinkedIn's API is the resource owner ID (get_credentials:resource_owner_id) - it must be included in the request. Unfortunately, once I create a LinkedIn App and authenticate with that, the resource_owner_id parameter is not provided anymore and I cannot find any documentation about how I could achieve that. In StravaAuth.e1_V1 the credential provider is loaded as follows: `_resourceProvider = new V1ResourceProvider(); StravaAuth.e1.e1_V1_CredentialProvider credentialProvider = new StravaAuth.e1.e1_V1_CredentialProvider(_resourceProvider); credentialProvider.Initialize();` I assume that the resource provider should receive the resource owner ID (corresponding to the name of the Application - "MyApp"). I'd really appreciate any help in finding how I could pass this parameter, or any suggestions about where it can be found in the different API calls of LinkedIn. Enjoy a wide variety of underwater creatures, whales and fishes in the deep ocean and in the local aquarium. Fishes swim in and out of your screen and you will enjoy the movement of the fishes, the breeze, waves and underwater creatures. A real pleasure to watch! Betacam is one of the oldest, most popular videocassette recorders. It has been around for almost 30 years, bringing you the best of technology available and giving you the freedom to capture and share those memories. With Betacam's rich heritage, precision encoding and high data compression, you can capture and view as much information as possible on a single tape. The Betacam recorder is designed to produce media content at a high resolution with the highest quality image and audio. Integrating the best in color technology, Betacam captures and records color video and sound with industry-standard RGB and YUV signals. Betacam has the highest color fidelity, and captures all the color hues from the scene while preserving true-to-life information. Betacam with 16mm tape and a lens for 2.25 inches (55.2mm) for 4:3 and 16mm film signals and 8mm for 16:9 can capture the colors in your subject with ease. You don't need to worry about color balance or exposure. With its long tape life, Betacam can provide hours of nonstop recording, making it the perfect choice for recording events. With Betacam's advanced, multi-track audio capability, you'll enjoy tape recording without losing any quality audio. As long as the tape is properly balanced, you'll have top-notch sound recording. The large amount of recording time can provide hours of music, video and picture recording with a single tape. Betacam's robust, award-winning design allows you to adjust the focus, aperture and iris with just a touch of a switch. Full focus-lock reduces any camera shake that occurs during recording. The large, clear viewfinder allows you to see exactly what you want to capture. Betacam's image stabilization compensates for unwanted camera shake, making your images more accurate. Record images using a full manual mode or automatic mode. Betacam's advanced, super-automatic recording allows you to set the camera's parameters automatically by color tones. The Betacam recorder can record even if you adjust the iris or zooming position. Easy to use! To start, simply connect the
