This allows for window overlap, transparency, and allows for windows that appear to be partially "invisible" (in a sense because the underlying desktop or desktop windows are not displayed). Translucency also allows applications to be shown within the menu bar, tray, and application icons. The Translucency section of the theme settings dialog will look similar to Figure 2.1, described below: Figure 2.1. Translucency Settings Dialog 2.5.2. Transparency Transparency refers to the ability to tint or shade (less light) your desktop background or control panel, thereby revealing underlying layers/panels. Transparency can improve your experience by enabling the user to access control panels and other settings without ever having to click your desktop or control panel. Transparency works by adjusting the background and foreground color of your windows; in other words, your windows are "shaded" from the background desktop (or control panel background). The "shading" options allow the user to change the background color for the desktop (by clicking your desktop, control panel, or taskbar) and change the foreground color of your windows so they are more transparent (less opaque).
