Sex differences in the consequences of stress as well as in response to antidepressant drugs have been well documented. These findings led us to address the effects of chronic stress in the adult male and female rat on the therapeutic activity of a novel group II/III mGlu2/3 receptor agonist, LY379268, in the forced swim test. In addition, the effects of two stressors (chronic isolation and olfactory bulbectomy) on the behavioral response to LY379268 were investigated. The results showed that the relative behavioral effect of the drug was significantly larger in stressed male than in female animals. These findings were substantiated by the effect of stress on the plasma levels of LY379268 as measured by HPLC. The olfactory bulbectomy eliminated the LY379268-induced improvement of immobility only in the females. Moreover, the chronic isolation did not modify the therapeutic effect of the drug in the animals. Furthermore, no differences in LY379268 concentrations were found in any of the brain areas analyzed. These results raise the possibility that sex differences may be observed in the treatment of depression with the group II/III mGlu2/3 receptor agonist LY379268 in both behavioral and biochemical assays.Epitope analysis of the porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome virus envelope protein using anti-envelope neutralizing monoclonal antibodies. The RHE strain of porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome virus (PRRSV) was chosen to prepare viral antigens for anti-envelope neutralizing monoclonal antibodies (mAbs) that are currently commercially available. The RHE strain encodes an envelope protein of 1095 amino acids (aa). The full-length envelope protein has the most antigenic epitope on its aa 14-311 and the surface loop 1 on aa 103-155, and these epitopes were disrupted by mutagenesis. Envelope proteins containing epitopes for neutralizing mAbs were selected by envelope protein immunoprecipitation and subsequent epitope identification, epitope-expressing vectors were constructed, 595f342e71
