This can be on the stack or on the heap. Therefore it may be sent from the stack or the heap. Now I want to be able to use the class foo several times in the same function. And I want to pass the pointer to the function bazMethod to every instance of foo. Therefore there must be an instance of foo on the stack or the heap. Therefore I cannot place foo inside a std::map, because the map entry is deleted when the std::map entry is removed. But by calling a static method of a class, I get a pointer to the object. Now I want to be able to use the pointer to the static method in foo multiple times inside my function. The obvious solution would be to pass a reference to foo to the function. But I think there must be a better solution. I read about object layout and the vtable inside an instance of foo. But I have no idea how this relates to my problem. A: Do your foo instances need to actually point at heap objects? If not, you might consider: class foo { public: foo(){} void bar(); }; void foo:bar() { //... if(...) {
