Send this page to someone via email SASKATOON - Canadian families whose children are being treated at the University of Saskatchewan Hospital are wondering where their kids are. All the children with little methotrexate have been transferred out of the Saskatoon hospital. "When they could have taken them right after the procedure, they should have. But, there's just no proper answers," said Kristin Toth. "I can't figure out, what's going on here. This is the only place that I know of that has all the facilities, all the equipment and the experts to do this." Tweet This According to the university's website, Children's Hospital is an institution that delivers specialized medical treatment and care for children, adolescents, and pregnant women. The center has six operating theatres, five intensive care units, two paediatric cardiac units, a paediatric cardiac catheterisation lab, a neonatal intensive care unit and it's considered one of the best children's hospitals in Canada. Story continues below advertisement "At some point we would like to be able to have a sense of what's going on with all of our patients, and for that, obviously, you need visibility into their health records," said Dr. Judy Sharp, the hospital's CEO. The university did not return Global News' request for comment Friday. Toth and her family are still waiting to hear more from the hospital. "We're trying to get more information than we have right now. I mean, why? There's no good answer for that," she said. "People just want answers, I think, because we're all hoping that everything is going to go well." In a statement, the University of Saskatchewan told Global News that "due to privacy concerns related to patient confidentiality, a university spokesperson was unable to share details about the specific reason for the transfers."import React, { Component } from'react'; import { Banner } from './utils/Banner'; import { Button } from './utils
