Confessions and confessions of a sick hen I think I've created quite a something out of a faded flower painting I did last summer. I've seen it in a shop window of my favorite nursery in Prague, and it took me back to yesteryear. [Here's the old one, and then I'll tell you about the new one] On to more recent and exciting news! cracks.Q: Cellular automata and cell death, how does a new cell die? I am studying cellular automata and am trying to understand a particular step in this paper (Feldman et al., 1996): In the figure above, the point where the initial cell dies is shown. What does it mean to say "the point where the initial cell dies"? A: This paper presents a simple proof that there is an equivalent configuration in which every cell $y$ has a successor cell $y'$. We use this observation to show that if the initial configuration has
