Check out the video above for details on the new controller features, including accurate Player 2 controls, sprinting, passing, and shooting. We will be releasing further details and videos in the coming weeks. Real-Life Player Trajectories The HyperMotion Engine also integrates real-life player movements, player collisions and ball physics to provide players with more realistic interactions and to match their real-life counterparts. Improved Ball Trajectories FIFA 22 uses a new ball physics model that takes into account the size of the player and their impact on the ball when players compete for the ball. Combined with our revamped control method, players will be able to perform acrobatic saves to make it in the box to pick out that through ball. Ball friction and flight characteristics also have been improved to provide a more realistic ball bounce, movement and feel to the game. New Controls FIFA 22 introduces the “HyperRealism” control method. Players will operate the ball by using the left and right sticks to determine which direction they wish to move the ball in and move the face buttons to the body parts they wish to use. Players will be able to jump in real life, and sprint while the ball is in motion and players will be able to turn to the correct direction after performing a specific sprint motion. In addition, the buttons allow players to execute a realistic acceleration and pass, as well as shoot. To illustrate this, we can use a player like Lionel Messi, who is known for his ability to turn to beat a defender and his precision passing. Players will be able to perform technical moves like reverse steps, powerslides and crossover dribbles, and will be able to use these controls in combination with on-ball actions such as tackles and interceptions.

Accurate Player Controls FIFA 22 introduces Player 2 controls that allow the player to control the Player 2 with the right analog stick as well as be able to make precise passes. This feature will be great for creating and executing passes from wider positions, and allows a player to drop back and be an attacking player on the break. Players will be able to perform player runs with the sprint buttons, while also being able to turn with the D-pad. Player 2 controls will be available on the left analog stick; the right analog stick will be used to turn to the correct direction while Player 2 is moving forward, while the button on the right analog stick will be used to
