I am planning to use LoRaWAN protocol to communicate with some sensors in IoT project. My questions are: What is LoRaWAN's application domain? According to the LoRaWAN website the purpose of LoRaWAN is to support multiple industrial radio protocols. Does this mean that LoRaWAN is not the right choice for IoT applications? There is usually an uplink transmission from IoT gateway to a LoRaWAN registered node. Will the LoRaWAN node just listen to the request and reply with the appropriate payload? Thanks A: I'm afraid not. LoRaWAN was created for a much more restrictive environment. It's intended for cases where a cost effective band is used (433MHz). In the same page of the LoRaWAN.org website is the following example: Among it's usages are: Sensor data (via SMS commands) Monitoring systems for safety and alarm systems in factories, and automation systems for building access control and indoor security, and for simple monitoring systems to manually turn on lights or alarm bells when no one is home using mobile phones. This is what the LoRaWAN FAQ says: What communication technology is in LoRaWAN? [...] LoRaWAN requires medium-range communications. Its long-range

This is an example of a scene where the array type of setting up lighting is. Irradiated eggs, and those exposed to radiation, die as they do so and can be much smaller," she says. "In this study, the effect was only in the egg and it was in some, but not all, of the eggs. So this is not a direct mechanism for radiation exposure. The small light exposure from putting the eggs in the light is probably a better model." "Unfortunately, this type of study cannot tell us what the effect would be on fetal development," Feurt said. "We need to wait until there is a human study on this to see if this is of any concern." She did add that these results further support reports about the harmful effects of too much exposure to light at this time of the year, when the days are shorter, presumably during fetal brain development. "If the fetal brain is exposed to light because of an internal light source, it's very unclear to what extent it can get enough of this light," she said. "The studies suggest that too much light is harmful, and it's possible that very little light is also harmful, or that the light exposure causes problems. This study again provides that link." Feurt said the risk of too much maternal exposure to artificial light could be lessened by the use of light-blocking backpacks and sunglasses by pregnant women. and are mostly used for managing your home's climate and security. Sometimes furnace repair requires some simple adjustment, while other times it means totally replacing the component. If you live in Carrollton, GA, your best option is to take your furnace to a professional heating and cooling repair shop. Take a close look around your home. Often times the air being pulled into a furnace through the blower comes into the attic and then directly out an attic or chimney flue. This can cause attic insulation to get warm,
