The role of the thymus and of hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal axis in the immune response has been well documented. The involvement of circadian rhythms of the immune system in chronic disease has recently come into interest. We measured circadian variations in peripheral blood lymphocyte proliferative responses in six normal subjects. Whole blood samples were obtained every 2 h from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. and from 12 p.m. to 8 a.m. and mononuclear cells were isolated. Lymphocytes were exposed to pokeweed mitogen and incorporation of 3H-thymidine was measured. The levels of interleukin-1, interleukin-6, and interferon-gamma, as well as the anti-inflammatory IgA and IgM were measured in the serum samples. Proliferation of lymphocytes was highest in the afternoon and lowest in the morning. The levels of IL-1, IL-6, and IFN-gamma increased significantly and IL-1 also followed a circadian rhythm. Serum
