The head of the United Nations' in-house "gigantic chronicler of random stuff" has announced that an upcoming version of the site will be "dramatically more satisfying" and not "just read like someone else's diary". As the official Twitter account for the United Nations Environment Programme posted yesterday, its new official account, the UN Environment Programme Europe Hub (UNEP Europe Hub) will be going live on 1 November 2017, "bringing with it a range of new features and content, scaling up on our willingness to tell the stories of people who are making a difference in addressing some of the world's greatest environmental challenges." Following the launch of the new hub, its director Francesco Del Nava posted a progress update. "In a nutshell, the new hub will be a giant remix of old content; opening a dialogue with a wide audience including those who are interested to learn about the environmental change work in the European Union." "It will be, in many ways, a more substantial and more satisfying site than previous versions, with an increased emphasis on our voices, and storytelling," Del Nava said in a statement on the UN environment portal. "Some people told me that in the past, the site's messages were too narrow, and it
