vCharacter Creation (1) Character Creation

1. Enter your gender, race, class, and name. The RPG Maker character builder will display each gender available for that race and class as well as the preset appearance images corresponding to each.

Select the gender and race for your character.

Before doing so, you can make your character appear on the screen as the default character by selecting the Female or Male change menu.

The character change menu allows you to change your character's gender and race. The preset image is also shown on the left-hand side.

Since RPG Maker works on a two-sided platform, characters can be summoned on the platform side on the right-hand side even if you are equipped with only one character.

You can select a race other than the four available on the right side.

The same menu that allows you to change your gender and race also allows you to change your character's age and body type.

Go to Body and Age to change these.

Changing the body type will change the character's build, which has effects on its combat ability.

Go to Climb and Weight to change these.

Changing the climber's build will change its attacking and defending abilities.

Go to Face to change the character's appearance.

The character's face is shown on the character's map screen during battle.

Go to Tail to change the character's hair pattern.

The character will change its hairstyle.

Go to Touch to change the character

Interview with Square-Enix:
Producers Hashimoto, Ebisu, Ootsuka, Mitsuhashi and Imai shared about the latest development

Square-Enix, Inc. in Tokyo is planning a typical first release of the game, so they are keeping things like basic character abilities and emotions just in case. At the time of this interview with con-goers of Shirogane Network, a few additional items were also released, for example, "Weapon O messe": each of the weapon that is used is bound with a skill that is activated when the weapon is used. It's a great addition that allows us to use a weapon variety that wasn't included at all at the time of development.

The present invention relates to a plastic hinge, and more particularly to a plastic hinge which is formed of a polymeric material. Various hinging devices have been developed to allow adjustable closure of doors, windows, and other coverings. Hinges formed of metal or other materials have been successfully applied to achieve this purpose. However, the subsequent removal of such hinges and reinstallation of a replacement hinge requires cutting of the hinge and replacement of the cut hinge. The process often results in damage to the surrounding material, and requires subsequent repair or replacement of the material. Attempts have been made to apply plastic, such as polycarbonate, polypropylene, and thermoplastic rubber, to the hinge body to avoid cutting of the hinge and subsequent replacement. However, these attempts have resulted in protruding clips, tabs, or posts in the hinge body. These protrusions can catch on clothing or other objects, making removal of the hinge difficult. Further, they reduce the space available for the hinge to function normally. Since the functional parts of the hinge are located in the hinge body, and not in a separate hinge clip, the hinge must be opened to remove the clip. In addition, the hinge may interfere with installation of the clip, and may prevent installation in narrow spaces. A need exists for an adjustable closure mechanism that is capable of adjustment without cutting of the hinge or subsequent replacement of the hinge. A need further exists for a plastic adjustable closure mechanism that does not interfere with its adjustment or installation. The present invention addresses these and other needs.

Oligo- and polyarylamides are thermally reversible self-assembling block copolymers. They are very interesting materials for the preparation of non-woven fabrics or membranes. Several studies have been performed by the authors to propose dye-sensitizations properties, where the copolymers are used as sensitive layers, or, in the case of two-dimensional membranes, as adjuvants for immobilization of molecular catalysts. In the preparation of
