The defendant asserts that he is entitled to summary judgment because Ms. Duncan has no admissible evidence to support her claim. For the reasons that follow, the Court agrees. The standard of proof in an employment discrimination case has shifted several times over the years. In the early stages of the case, McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S.Ct. 1817, 36 L.Ed.2d 668 (1973), established the burden of proof in Title VII cases. Under McDonnell Douglas, a plaintiff had the burden of establishing a prima facie case of discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, thereby shifting the burden to the defendant to rebut the presumption of discrimination by articulating a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the adverse employment action. Then, under Texas Dep't of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 101 S.Ct. 1089, 67 L.Ed.2d 207 (1981), the plaintiff had to show that the defendant's articulated reason for the adverse employment action was a pretext for discrimination. In 1991, the Supreme Court in St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 113 S.Ct. 2742, 125 L.Ed.2d 407 (1993), stated that the shifting burdens established in McDonnell Douglas are no longer applicable to a claim based on indirect evidence, like circumstantial evidence. Id. at 506-07, 113 S.Ct. at 2747. Instead, in a case like this one, where the claim of discrimination rests on indirect evidence, a plaintiff must " d0c515b9f4

Also, in the current study, there was no difference in the PIP between the two groups. The explanation for the fact that the IVDA scoring was higher than the NIVA scoring might be that the current result is due to the fact that the pain measurements in this study were done by medical technologists who were blinded to the patients' group. We found that there was a significant difference in the pain VAS between the two groups. Since VAS is a single question with a numeric scale, it does not provide any information about the intensity of pain, and because it only provides a yes or no answer, it is a categorical scale. In this case, each score has a different weighting, which means that a higher score does not mean a higher intensity of pain and can explain the fact that the VAS score was not higher in the IVDA group ([@B12]). In this study, we found no difference between the two groups in terms of the degree of sedation measured using the Ramsay score. However, we did find a significant difference between the two groups in terms of the degree of satisfaction measured using the questionnaire. This could be because the need for sedation was evaluated by the patient himself/herself at home and then, using a questionnaire, the patients were asked if they had sedation during the hospitalization and the sedation score. Some limitations of this study are worth mentioning. First, this was a single-center, retrospective cohort study, and in order to change the impact of these factors on the study results, we suggest conducting randomized, controlled clinical trials with larger samples and controlling for confounders. Second, the data in this study were obtained using a convenience sample; thus, it was not possible to calculate any sample size for the study. Third, the study sample was small. Thus, when we repeated the study with larger samples, we will have a more solid result. Finally, a single question as well as a single numeric scale for the measurement of pain cannot provide enough information regarding the intensity of pain. Conclusion ===== The results of this study indicate that IVDA provided lower sedation scores and higher satisfaction scores. These findings suggest that IVDA was more effective in providing sedation in patients
