Escape From Hollywood The Hellecasters1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to apparatus for electro-optically scanning a recording material that has been formed or printed on a flat surface, and more particularly to apparatus for electro-optically scanning a recording material that has been formed on a substrate of a printed circuit board. 2. Description of Related Art U.S. Pat. No. 4,607,156 to Land et al discloses an apparatus for electro-optically scanning an exposed and developed recording material. For the apparatus to operate successfully, the recording material must be perfectly flat. However, the process steps that form the recording material are imperfect or imprecise, resulting in a recording material that is not perfectly flat. As a result, the electro-optical apparatus will not operate correctly. To overcome this problem, the apparatus disclosed in the above cited patent takes steps to ensure that the recording material is perfectly flat. Specifically, an initial x-y position detector scans the recording material to produce a first set of x-y position data points. This data is used to determine a second set of x-y position data points that are centered on each of the first set of x-y position data points. These second set of x-y position data points are used to scan a series of evenly spaced x-y lines along a perpendicular z axis (perpendicular to the x-y plane) to produce a third set of x-y position data points. As noted above, the data from the third set of x-y position data points is used to electro-optically scan the recording material. As a result, the apparatus produces accurate, properly formatted x-y data that is centered on the middle of the recording material, regardless of the imperfections in the original recording material. The apparatus that is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,607,156 is suitable for electro-optically scanning a recording material that has been applied directly to a substrate. However, the apparatus is not suitable for scanning a recording material that has been applied to a substrate of a printed circuit board. Specifically, the apparatus uses a galvanometer that is attached to a microscope mount. A combination of the microscope mount and the galvanometer are difficult to position precisely at a desired starting position relative to the substrate. Moreover, the apparatus includes many parts, including complex mechanical mechanisms that create a large amount of friction and heat. As a result, this apparatus is not suitable for use in an
