I am currently doing a simple emberJS app using rails as a backend. I tried to find a solution online but didn't got yet. This is my problem : 1- I got an index.html.erb that display a list of elements. 2- I got a view named comments.js.erb that use an AJAX to query my API. 3- I got another view named comment_template.js.erb that will display the data from the comment table. But I got stuck at here, how to render the comment_template.js.erb file so as to display the data in my index.html.erb. Any idea? Thank you in advance for your response. A: Rendering views is really easy when you have a simple template engine, like Handlebars. There are all sorts of tutorials explaining how to do this. For instance: {{comment.comment}} Then in your routes file or an action helper that renders the page: var App = Ember.Application.create({}); App.Router.map(function() { this.resource('comments'); }); And then in a route App.IndexRoute = Ember.Route.extend({ renderTemplate: function() { this.render('comments'); } }); A very simple approach that gets you 95% of the way there. However, if you need to manage updating/composing the views that you are rendering, you will need to use a more advanced templating system like mustache. Also, you might find backbone.js to be easier to work with for this kind of simple setup. Q: Electron Framework (C
