Vijeo .This week I went to Scandinavia to speak at the 21st International Documentary Film Festival in Copenhagen, Denmark. I was there to meet with filmmakers, and connect with fellow documentary filmmakers. I had such a fulfilling time. I met with many other documentary filmmakers, and interviewed many of them. I got to chat with popular writers, directors, and filmmakers about their experiences in the world of documentary film. I also had a chance to chat with folks from the festival about the work they are doing and the work they hope to do. The documentary I was honored to speak at the festival was The Great American Dream Machine: My Life. This documentary is one that is full of hope for change. It tells the story of the now 91 year old filmmaker-director, Eugene Jarecki. It highlights some of the obstacles that he faced as a creative, one who has put his whole life into his work. Throughout his whole life Jarecki has been one of a very few directors to be self-financed and selfdistributed. He has been an innovator, and created movies that point a way to a better society. His work is bold, and just might change our world. This documentary is also a look at Jarecki's life, and how he has impacted others, especially in a time when films telling stories of outsiders are very common. We are seeing people like Jarecki in more and more documentary films as we live in a time when people need stories told by outsiders, who are not afraid to make a difference.@charset "UTF-8"; // \
