Autocad 2016 keygen x-force for all s (Gürtler, [@B22]). To address this issue, we designed an assay that employed the reliable GFP--Tub-expressing haploid yeast strain and used the mating-type switch strategy as described by Overgaard et al. ([@B35]) in order to monitor colony formation. At time point zero, we mixed spore--mother cell pairs, left them for 60--90 min to complete the process of meiosis, and then washed away all but few cells of the diploid state. As expected, shortly before competence is released, this strain will show a low percentage of diploid cells (~3% of the population, as measured by FACS) and, therefore, in a mixed culture of haploid and diploid cells, this diploid fraction should remain constant over time. An increase of the diploid fraction over time would be a sign of their own degradation. In this assay, we observed that the biofilm became less dense over time and that at the end of the experiment, ~50% of the biofilm population consisted of diploid cells (figure [2]{#F2}{ref-type="fig"}).
