The way to an abundant mind Sometimes I feel like I just want to give up, feel like I'm in a rut, and want a break from it all. For me, this means feeling impatient with myself and others, and not particularly interested in socializing or even reading books for pleasure. It seems as if one of my deep-seated desires is for a break from the world. I'd love a substantial vacation, but there's only so much time in the day. I've been reading some of the essays of Gratian. At first, his writing sounds overwrought, but his message intrigues me. I've been thinking, "Why can't I think like Gratian?" He makes it seem so easy, yet it takes a huge amount of discipline and effort. I think it's because the mind is not perfect and will go to great lengths to reject ideas and principles it doesn't like. I read that. Truly, it makes me want to punch something. I think one of my problems in life is focusing too much of my energy on the small stuff. Where should I spend my time? What should I do? How should I react? As one is focused on God, the holy place, and prayer, then there is no room for petty things like anger or hurt. In Christ, there is grace. And in Christ, one has no sense of personal pain or suffering. One lives in the mind of Christ. How does one follow such a path? Through the disciplines of prayer and study, hopefully. That's what I'm in the middle of right now. And maybe I will get
