"Saving Ourselves from the City" is an interesting real-time simulation game where you have to help the main character to hold on in self-isolation with limited resources. Every day you face a difficult choice: how to eke out your groceries, whose request you should respond to, and who is to be left without a piece of bread. And most important: how to find and properly divide activities so you will not go insane as a result. While playing the game, you are going to have a lot of exciting quests that can fundamentally change the game process. The lives of the other characters, as well as your own, depend on you. You can make new friends and even have some of them live at your place. Whether you can withstand the devastating monotony and maintain a sound mind, or you will surrender to depression, depends only on you.

Shop Announcement We've started selling new sets of custom designed, professionally printed t-shirts. These t-shirts combine our original artwork with a huge selection of custom-designed logos and are available in four color-ways. The game features a story campaign, sandbox, and micromanagement.

Story Campaign Your path will have you befriend new characters, traveling to new locations, and solving new puzzles as you discover the truth behind your grandfather's death.

Sandbox The open world lets you explore the world freely, with many locations all over each of the six biomes.

Micro-management You can micromanage all of the characters and play on a small scale. Build the character of your dreams, and have fun raising them in your happy and fun farm!

Tips for New Players The fastest way to get connected and get some experience is by playing another user's games. If you're not sure who to go after, go for the relatively new players that have joined the game since the last harvest. Befriend the characters that you play to keep them happy. Get to know the other characters by playing with them, giving them gifts, and asking them about their backstories. Explore all of the items on the map, there's a lot of stuff to find in the world. Characters have three goals and desires, they will ask you to help with their goals and desires. Help them and they'll help you. Be careful with the other players. Don't push them too far. You don't want to have your farm taken either. Block characters from entering or leaving your farm.

Farm Stash and Storage Unlock the stashed items by completing the in game tasks or helping the characters with their goals. A simple and easy way to get to the farm is to use the bridge in town. Just keep an eye on the farm and explore the villages on each biomes.

New Characters After each harvest, you're going to want to invite new characters to your farm to help with the harvest, livestock, and farming. Characters will start at level one, no skills, and without items. Don't rush to invite new characters, go with your gut and invite them if you think they'll help you. There are three biomes, each with multiple locations. Visit them all.

Farming for Profit Farming for profit is simple, but it can sometimes bring unexpected problems. You can start farming for profit by clicking on the green Checkmark, which should open a new window in the menu.

: Body Modification and the Self-Made Man

2008-10-20T21:13:54+00:00 Tattoo Punk: Body Modification and the Self-Made Man Jonny Blair Neither do the words “baseball” nor “Chinese food” come to mind when you think of Tim Henkelman. In fact, the 46-year-old self-described artist and inventor lives in Big Bear, California, where he spends much of his spare time creating artwork and doing home improvement projects — including engineering ballerina shoes. But for all his artistry and inventiveness, Henkelman admits, he can’t afford at the moment to be kind to himself, because he’s barely making ends meet. “Getting really creative with bartering, and through the kindness of people and the community, is how I’ve managed to survive,” said Henkelman, who pays his rent, car expenses, and most of his bills in exchange for design work. “I have a very steep learning curve. I work through it, and, if nothing else, I learn something new every day.” Henkelman is one of many innovators in today’s economy who take the “hustle” approach to their economic lives, also known as a “value-driven lifestyle.” That usually means freelancing, working on contract jobs (as in the case of Henkelman), or doing self-employment (a frequently pulled trick on Craigslist). Unlike the blue-collar majority of the country — and the blue-collar majority of self-employed Americans — Henkelman is a middle-class black man who has made it to the middle class by hustling. Unlike tattoo artists (whose general unemployment rate hovers around 12 percent), many of the self-made employed are even making money on the side, from their side hustles. This is the case of Dwight Cooper, a 30-year-old crane operator from Las Vegas who lost his job in September after the bankruptcy of his construction company. Since then, Cooper has been moonlighting as a carpenter and auto mechanic in his ‘hood on the hope of finding work. One of the biggest reasons for the ‘hustle economy’ is the self-reliance component that is a byproduct of the recession and the Great Recession. The bursting of the real estate
