AARHUS Efter de seneste ugers økonomiske vækst i Danmark har politikerne igen slået til tålmodighed, når det kommer til samfundspleje. Samtidig kalder de i stigende grad på alle til at arbejde mindre. Men hvad er det for en opgave, I har brug for, siger ministeren. Med lidt humor skal han udtrykke sig på denne måde. Teknologieordførerne i Folketinget og de øvrige partier har på fornemmelsen, at i Aarhus har vi brug for en ny model for hjem og arbejde. Vi er ikke afhængige af, at folk arbejder efterhånden, fordi vi har brug for det. Men det er borgerne i Aarhus, som allerede er i gang med at gøre noget ved. Nu skal vi også gøre noget ved deres hverdag. I stedet for at vente med at hjælpe dem, der er i forvejen, er vi nødt til at komme ind og hjælpe dem, vi kan. Afhængig af en masseforretninger kunne vi have startet eksempelvis Gråbrøndsammenhængen i 2014. Vi holdt åbent på rød blok, og borgerne kunne søge hjælp hos os. Hvor var de? Hjemmehjælpere og andre, som andre har kunnet lægge mærke til. Billedet peger højt til syne. Vi har gjort noget ved sygdomme, der netop hjemmehjælper og støtter syge, og som ikke rummer sig ind på deres helt egen måde. Der var n

The Role of the Ultra-High-Field (700 T) MRI in the Evaluation of Bone Marrow Involvement in Leukemic Patients in the Provisional Durable CR (PROMID) Phase II Trial. High-field magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is better for the evaluation of bone marrow (BM) responses than standard-field MRI in leukemic patients. However, the clinical role of high-field MRI is not well defined. A total of 28 (6%) patients treated in the PROMID (prospective multicenter trial of prolonged remission in childhood AML, relapsed acute leukemia) trial had BM examinations, most with both standard-field and 700 T MRI within ± 2 days. The therapeutic effect of chemotherapy or immunotherapy on the BM was evaluated ($n = 27$). As the number of BM examinations performed was low, the most common conditions in all patients were T1 hyperintensities (35%), T2 dark spots (19%) and contrast enhancement (14%). The number of cases with abnormal MRI findings was higher after induction therapy (77%) than after consolidation therapy (57%). Treatment effect on the BM was good ($n = 14$) or moderate ($n = 6$) in 87%, and there were no patients with poor responses. The accuracy of the standard-field MRI in detecting therapy effect was as follows: poor (20%), good (24%) and moderate (56%). The sensitivity of high-field MRI was high (100%), and the specificity was moderate (53%). The accuracy of the standard-field MRI with contrast enhancement was high (100%), but the sensitivity was low (59%). The combination of high-field MRI and standard-field MRI provided the best prediction of therapy effect on the BM. In conclusion, high-field MRI with contrast enhancement accurately diagnosed BM diseases (good or moderate response) and predicted the therapy effect in leukemic patients with high sensitivity and specificity. The evaluation of therapy effect by high-field MRI will improve the prognostic assessment of patients with AML. Aryloid/psoriasis syndrome: radiographic findings. The frequency of malignant diseases in patients with a history of psoriasis is well known, while the association of psoriasis with various neoplasias of the gastrointestinal tract, breast, uterus and liver has not been fully clarified. Our observation of a 29 year old patient with a history of psoriasis for 30 years, who developed malignant neoplasia of the uterus and small bowel, led to
