Enjoy the game Crack ELDEN RING game by NeroS AdvertisementThe acting attorney general can override DOJ's wishes about who can be in the special counsel's team investigating Russian interference in the 2016 election, leaving the door open for Kushner. The Justice Department sent letters to a number of congressional committees before and after it named Robert Mueller's special counsel requesting that the special counsel's team include "certain categories of individuals" as specified in Justice regulations. The DOJ's Office of Legal Counsel responded to each request by refusing to name those categories, or any of the individuals involved. That changed after Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein appointed Mueller to run a criminal investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election. The White House quickly appointed Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner to the presidential transition team. The House Intelligence Committee issued a subpoena for his communications. Meanwhile, Special Counsel Robert Mueller issued a subpoena for a variety of records from Mr. Kushner. Democrats have expressed concern about the White House leaking the information about the special counsel's investigation and Mr. Kushner's legal troubles to the Russian government, and have demanded access to the relevant documents. A bipartisan group of Senators on Monday evening wrote Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, indicating they may subpoena Mr. Kushner for his testimony about his Russia-related meetings and contacts. On Tuesday morning, Dianne Feinstein, a ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, responded to the Times reports with an official letter requesting documents, an interview with Mr. Kushner, and any other records relating to his contacts with Russians, including the names of all people he communicated with about the matters. The letter cites the "serious questions" raised by multiple news reports that Mr. Kushner had "numerous contacts with Russian officials and/or other foreign nationals during the presidential transition and transition into the administration." Rebecca Klinsky, a spokeswoman for the top Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats, wrote on Twitter that the request "sets the stage" for a potential subpoena. The acting Attorney General, Sally Yates, wrote a letter to the Senate Intelligence Committee on Friday, telling the committee it was inappropriate for the Justice Department to enforce a subpoena against Mr. Kushner regarding "any communications between Russian officials and individuals connected to the campaign." Jeff Sessions has advocated for the DOJ to bring criminal charges against Russia and has a history
