proliferation and differentiation by the proliferation-inducing gene product "PAF1". The glial cell division and differentiation factor (GDF) or the proliferation-inducing gene product (PIG) was originally characterized in the neuroepithelium of chicken embryos and was shown to be able to stimulate the proliferation of embryonic chick dorsal root ganglion cells. In the present study, the proliferation-inducing activity of PIG was demonstrated to reside in the region between amino acids 99 and 210, and a synthetic peptide containing amino acids 103 to 120 was identified which showed a mitogenic effect on chick dorsal root ganglion cells in primary monolayer cultures. In contrast to the nucleic acid sequence of PIG, which is present in two copies in both chicken and mouse, the PIG mRNA was shown to be present in only one copy in chicken embryo, suggesting the existence of a second gene product in the chicken genome.
