Wacom and Photoshop Wacom tablets provide a smooth, stylus-input surface for the interface of Photoshop. The Wacom Cintiq Pro can be connected to a mac or a Windows computer via USB for use with Photoshop. Users will need to install the appropriate driver from Wacom before connecting their display to Photoshop. One of the reasons why it is called "Adobe Photoshop" and not "Wacom Photoshop" is that the company's name is based in Southern California. Unlike the Cintiq, this tablet has a trackpad (mouse) with which users can navigate menus, right-click, middle-click to zoom and left-click to select a tool. One of the main differences between the two systems is that the stylus screen size is different; the Windows version is 210 mm (8.3 in) in height and 129 mm (5 in) in width, while the Mac version is closer to the size of a legal pad, at 205 mm (8 in) height and 119 mm (4.7 in) width. The Mac version has pressure sensing technology, so it feels similar to using a mouse. You can preview onscreen images and type in Photoshop with a Mac. The tablet is very expensive, considering its size. Wacom sells a company-developed model for about $20,000. Some features of Photoshop CC include Interface Some of the tool palettes are similar to the Interface of other Adobe applications. Color Palettes Looks like Pantone, the ubiquitous and very powerful online color palette tool that can be used for color matching. Layer The Layers panel can support a very large number of layers, unlike Gimp, which is limited to 100. Shapes/Caps/Text There is a Shape Layers area in which you can create vector shapes or use the Pen tool to create a Path. Curves You can use the Curves panel to create custom gradients and color-balance images. Effects The Effects panel is similar to Gimp's Filter menu, which is a feature of a basic version of Photoshop. Rulers There are rulers (horizontal and vertical lines) that indicate layer height, width, and position. Brushes, Pens, and Paths You can get

Q: Sharepoint webservice Our company already has an intranet project and there we have the webservice provided by Sharepoint. We have to make a new intranet project, but now the new intranet project has to make use the webservice in sharepoint 2010. The problem is that all the objects we must create and do the operations don't exist in the sharepoint 2010. A example is the following object. I need this object. SPSiteDataDetail Could someone help me, please? Best regards Nicolas A: You can install the SharePoint 2010 WCF Client Components on the development machine which should have the .NET framework version to match (even if you're not using the .NET WCF Client components for your site, it's a good idea to have both installed). That will allow you to connect to SharePoint using Visual Studio, and debug the web services calls if required. Of course, as ever, you should bear in mind the whole .NET WCF Client Components pattern is deprecated: at the time of writing, the WCF tools provided in the .NET Framework 4.5 will not work with SharePoint 2010. You'd be better off deploying the .NET 4.5 runtime and re-installing the SharePoint 2010 WCF Client Components. Q: How to extract the digits of a floating point number?
