Photoshop comes with a multitude of fonts. They can be used to add detail to an image, or give some images a different look. However, when creating your work, you may want to combine a lot of images (for example in a collage) and create a new image with just one of those images. In that case, you need an ImageJacking Action. These actions can use an unlimited number of selected images and put them into a new single image. An easy way to get started is to use the Photoshop actions that are included in the Photoshop CS5.5 box (see the link below). These actions may be useful for newbies to create some professional-looking images, but they don't really take advantage of the features in Photoshop. Create an ImageJacking Action in Photoshop The Show Package in Photoshop CS5.5 has a "Create an action" button, which opens the "Create an action" dialog box. Here, you can select which actions you want to include in your new action. Check "Create an action" if you want to include this action in your new action. Create an Action with an Image In the next step, you'll see a dialog box where you can preview the available actions. Since an action consists of a sequence of tasks, you can select as many actions as you want. Since it is only possible to select actions that are not already used, you can add new actions that might not yet be in the list. Choose one or more actions that you want to include in your new action. Click on the "Open" button to add the actions to your new action. In the next step, the dialog box is closed, and it's time to go to the Photoshop Actions menu to start the action. Create an Image Jacking Action with an Image When you click on the Photoshop Actions button in Photoshop, you will see a menu with your actions.
