The data is pulled from a database and has about 20 columns. When I download the file I want to retain the same data that was loaded into the database. At the moment in my controller I am using the following code to build and return a CSV file $data = $this->addToTable($data); return CSV::download('myFolder', $data); How do I save the $data values to be saved in the file so that when it is opened it is preloaded with the data as it was at the start of the request? I've read about Serializer and find that it may well be the best way to go but have not been able to get the syntax right. A: You can do this by passing the whole data that you want to save to the browser as a parameter like this: CSV::download('myFolder', $data); // the parameter part should be like this: // application/x-www-form-urlencoded; charset=utf-8 // $_GET['data']='...'; Laravel will be able to parse this format and will do the things you need: load the data from the database and serialize it, send it to the browser and send it to the correct location. Thanks in advance, A: Currently, the physical delivery channel becomes the only legal way to get the latest and most secure version of this software, in order to protect their key, and their registered users. Your DVD will be delivered to you by your DVD mail order. The DVD delivery is a legal way to get software from the DVD-ROM, but it's not a commonly accepted means of distribution at this point. It still needs to be accepted, and the DVD delivery channel is only getting slowly accepted for software distribution. We will soon make an announcement for the secure physical delivery channel. Yoga Therapy, Cambodia Yoga Therapy Cambodia – Cambodia has a history of 10,000 years old and claims to have been the first civilisation. However, all these days the Cambodians are struggling to keep their culture and language. In Cambodia, Yoga therapy had been practised for centuries. However, it is still considered as the new medicine and the new niche of the century. In fact,
