This book was recommended by professor keving lee. Isolation of pork virus from an asymptomatic pig. Swine fever virus (SFV) was isolated from the blood and spleen of an asymptomatic Suffolk X Landrace-Hampshire sow in 1948. The isolate proved to be an efficient indicator of field infection and disease. However, it did not produce any signs of disease in a normal pig until 12 days post-inoculation. Virus was isolated from the blood of the pig and also from the kidneys and spleen. In addition to the SFV strain, an uncharacterized virus was isolated from the blood of the pig. The possibility of the virus being a virus infection is discussed.A conventional soccer ball is predominantly made of a rubber material. The ball is comprised of a ball body for rolling on a ground surface, a ball covering configured to cover the ball body, and an outer shell configured to cover the ball covering. The ball covering must be sufficiently hard to prevent the ball from being deformed and damaged, and must be sufficiently soft and elastic to impart a pleasant touch. The outer shell is pliable, and protects the ball covering from scratching. As disclosed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 6-280189, the softness of the ball covering is determined by the hardness of a cover rubber material. The outer shell is usually comprised of a urethane resin material. The resin is excellent in weather resistance and durability, so that the outer shell is highly resistant to heat and wear. The outer shell is formed by laminating a plurality of layers, which consist of a colored outer layer or a clear outer layer and a cover layer disposed beneath the colored layer or the
