The authors report a case of lung carcinoid occurring in a 53-year-old female. Its manifestations, which are those of a localised carcinoma, include bronchial stenosis, purulent expectoration, hemoptysis, and local tumefaction. They observed neither lymph node enlargement nor hepatic metastases. The diagnosis was established by histological examination of a bronchial biopsy. The diagnosis is based on the positivity of hormonal secretion with serotonin and chromogranine, and the positivity of chromogranine, but not of serotonin, in tumoral cells. The cell receptors are also positive. An intra-operative histological examination of the lymph nodes revealed the presence of tumoral cells. The patient died in two years of metastatic disease without being treated. These tumours are most often benign and they are cured by a lobectomy or a pneumonectomy. The place of pharmacological treatment is not determined.Q: How to calculate if grid row is valid? I am building a dynamic form that allows the user to add multiple fields, one after another.
