Crack. We've got a World Cup win right now and most of us are either gobsmacked or chuffed but there are still a few who aren't especially super, er, 'duh' about the fact. 1. Ruud Gullit The greatest World Cup winner of all time, who proved plenty of people wrong by adapting to a life beyond football by becoming the founder of one of the world's biggest advertising agencies, the Dutchman was nominated for the Fifa 100 a few years back and the Wall Street Journal's list of the world's 10 greatest players. 2. Johan Cruyff The recognisably Dutch playmaker always looked like he'd be a good bloke and a top player before anyone knew the first thing about him or how good he was. Should, perhaps, be top of this list. 3. Franz Beckenbauer

The man who gave us the old-school way of approaching the game and was basically the most complete footballer in the world during his playing days. Nothing. 4.

Paolo Maldini The greatest centre-back of all time and one of the best defenders of the modern era. His career, obviously, is the best argument for a ban on verbal abuse.

5. Ronaldo The best player on earth for quite a bit of time. In making him, Portugal's talented aim-and-shoot midfielder, there is also a part of us that regrets the fact we never saw the world the real Ronaldo was capable of. What did he really look like? 6.
