Myocardial interstitial cell-matrix adhesion molecules and peri-infarct remodelling. Migration and expansion of myocardial interstitial cells (MICs) is involved in the origin of fibrosis and cardiac remodelling. The aim of this study was to evaluate the expression of ICAM-1, ICAM-2, ICAM-3, and CD44 on the myocardial cell surface of the infarcted and peri-infarct areas. The expression of ICAM-1 and CD44 was evaluated in the infarcted area (I) of adult rabbits and in areas of normal myocardium surrounding the area at risk (A) and the infarcted area (CA), using immunohistochemistry (IHC). Fibrosis was also evaluated by measuring hydroxyproline in the infarcted area and by immunoblotting analysis of fibronectin expression. Myocardial cell adhesion molecule expression was evaluated on the membrane and cytoplasm of cardiomyocytes, and on the membrane and pericellular matrix of collagen-containing cells, using immunogold and immunogold-silver methods. ICAM-1, ICAM-2, ICAM-3, and CD44 were expressed in the membrane and cytoplasm of cardiomyocytes. The IHC results showed the expression of ICAM-1, ICAM-2, and ICAM-3 in cardiomyocytes of infarcted area, A and CA, without any Bromocriptine in patients with acromegaly: effect on growth hormone-releasing hormone. Ten patients with primary acromegaly were treated with bromocriptine in order to evaluate the efficacy of this drug on growth hormone-releasing hormone (GRH) release. Blood samples were taken at regular intervals for the measurement of plasma growth hormone, insulin, and GRH. A significant decrease of GH levels from 54.3 to 11.0 mU/l (p less than 0.001) was seen at 1 month after starting bromocriptine therapy. At the same time, the plasma GRH concentration increased from 33.5 to 97 pg/ml (p less than 0.001) and remained almost unchanged during the following months. Blood glucose levels decreased from 4.9 to 4.1 mmol/liter (p less than 0.01). The rate of growth in the group of 8 patients was reduced from 16.0 to 7.2 cm/year. Bromocriptine has proved to be an efficacious therapy in most of our patients. However, because of the std::cout The early consequences of nurse-led care of the patient with heart failure. The early consequences of nurse-led care of the patient with heart failure have not been critically examined. To assess patients' perceptions of the impact of nurse-led care on their experience of heart failure, the care they received in hospital and their situation in the community. A longitudinal observational study of patients discharged from hospital with heart failure between February and August 2004 from a dedicated ward and discharged to the community. Four hundred and thirty-eight patients were recruited to the study. At 6-month follow-up, 5.4% were deceased, 76% reported that they were managing well, 5.2% had experienced at least one recurrence of heart failure and 20% had experienced symptoms of breathlessness. There were no significant differences
