HyperMotion Technology © 2016 EA Sports PTE LTD. Players will be able to dribble more quickly, shoot with greater accuracy and control the ball better than ever before, while defenders have been given a new AI opponent. The introduction of movement into the FIFA video game franchise is further underscored by the fact that gameplay can now be influenced by external factors, such as the weather, or by the approach of opposition players, who can be sensed from a distance. "FIFA represents the pinnacle of athleticism in sports video games, and this is reflected in the unparalleled realism of the beautiful visuals that players see on screen, the movement of the players on the pitch, and the way they interact with each other," said Peter Moore, CEO of EA Sports. "With this in mind, our goal for FIFA was to create an authentic and immersive football experience for all football fans and enthusiasts." "FIFA is one of the most popular sports games in the world, with more than 250 million players globally," added Jan Reiche, president of EA Sport, who joined Moore on stage. "This new generation of FIFA brings a more comprehensive experience for our players by empowering them with the tools and immersion they need to be the best players they can be." Controls © 2016 EA Sports PTE LTD. "This new generation of FIFA expands on many of the game's most popular features, including new gameplay mechanics, improved game-day presentation and deeper social features," said David Rutter, Chief Technology Officer at EA Sports. "These new innovations, combined with advanced artificial intelligence and character modelling, create a level of authenticity that is unprecedented in the industry." New Optimized User Interface FIFA 22 introduces a new, more accessible User Interface (UI). According to Moore, players will be able to see all the information they need to make the best in-game decision, regardless of what they are playing - from the team in front of them or the player they are comparing their team to. When viewing their team in action, players will be able to: See team and player stats, including youth team representatives, using the highly responsive graphics system; See player comparisons with other players in their team, online and via EA Sports Ultimate Team (EASUT); Visualise player performance over any period of a match via the Team and Player Management tool in the
