NRX to NX 3.2.0.2 Full Version.Leveraging the power of cognition for the internet of things November 6, 2016 by Kushal Das The global market for Internet of Things (IoT) is expected to be worth $19.8 billion by 2017. The vast majority of these revenues will come from software and services. As those services get more sophisticated, there will be increasingly interesting use cases that go beyond simply monitoring, controlling, and managing. To achieve mainstream adoption of IoT, these services will need to be more available, interoperable, and robust, necessitating the creation of semantic technologies for the industry. In particular, Web 3.0, which will adopt the Semantic Web as its core model, will require a new breed of IoT technology: Smart Things. Smart Things will help to close the gap between the internet and the physical world: not as an end unto itself, but as a real-world reasoning platform — applying our very human cognition capabilities to the internet. 6d1f23a050
