TODAY Sports) INDIANAPOLIS – The NFL is a family of sorts. Everyone is related to one another at some point. The proximity and culture that is associated with the league bring family units together; loved ones leave family units together. The Indianapolis Colts are in the process of searching for a new general manager – the first time in Indianapolis sports history it has done so. It's a bid to bring back the family. "We have a lot of good people in our organization," Colts general manager Ryan Grigson said. "We like having a lot of people around you and having people around you that you can trust. We are trying to build that here. We are trying to build a family here. We are trying to build a good environment for the people that work for us and for the fans that buy tickets to see us play. "It does require a trust there and a camaraderie and a family in a lot of situations. We had a lot of success here in a number of different areas, but I think it was a big deal for us to get the right person to make those decisions. I think we have a great group of people that are in our organization and that you can trust." Indeed, Grigson's tenure in Indianapolis has been marked with a number of changes. He has not had much of a chance to steward the same team for four straight years, going through a market change and regime change. He has been part of two different general managers, two head coaches, a general manager, head coach and quarterbacks coach at the same time. A new general manager is needed in Indianapolis; and due to the position's importance, it will be fascinating to see what happens as part of the search. One of the first names
