The population was 28,898 at the 2010 census, up from 27,925 at the 2000 census. Gary is considered part of the Chicago metropolitan area. History The earliest white settlers to the area were German-speaking Quaker immigrants from Westphalia who were admitted to Illinois in 1803. Many of the settlers were affiliated with the Christian Reformed Church, a Protestant denomination which originated in Germany and spread to various countries throughout the world.

Gary was founded in 1868 along the Chicago and North Western Railway, now part of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad line. It was an early railroad town built to service the needs of the railroad. The city name was inspired by one of the Christian Reformed churches, which was named after the German city of Geismar. The first general stores were opened, and the town began to take shape. However, this rail line stopped service to Gary in 1871. The railroad established a replacement service in 1874. Railroads, farmers, and the Chicago meatpacking industry produced wealth for the town. In 1889, the first newspaper, the Gary Gazette, was established. For the first three decades, the only industries in town were stores and lumberyards. The lumberyards produced railroad ties and railroad supplies and maintained warehouses along the rail line. In 1890, the manufacture of canning jars began in Gary. The canning jars became widely used for preserving food and were an important part of the community for decades. After the Wall Street crash of 1929, the Great Depression occurred.
