Abstract Objective To review the problem, report a case of a patient with recurrent massive hemorrhage from a complicated ovarian cyst, and discuss the management options available. Background Vaginal and cesarean section deliveries may be indicated due to a small pelvis in a patient with a large ovarian cyst. A case of a woman with recurrent massive hemorrhage from a complicated ovarian cyst, managed by a combined procedure of abdomino-perineal resection of the cyst and vaginal repair is presented. Results A giant unilocular cyst was found in a 23-year-old woman, weighing 450 g and measuring 17 cm in diameter. The patient had two previous spontaneous vaginal deliveries and a low transverse incision cesarean section delivery 9 years before. She had a recurrent massive hemorrhage of a 20 cm cyst during the first menstrual period after a full term vaginal delivery. A cystectomy was undertaken. Conclusion Abdomino-perineal resection of the cyst and a vaginal repair was a more appropriate treatment option for a giant ovarian cyst because, compared to other gynecologic procedures, it provides good cosmetic results, low cost, and no extra risk to the infant.
