2.5M.Friday, February 28, 2012 How many times have you heard the phrase "Can't fool me once, can't fool me twice?" Not satisfied with losing an election and then making up some b.s. to backtrack on your stance of no cut and run, President Obama is now saying that we can't blame Congress for what he is doing.

We can't blame Republicans in the Senate who are holding out for the "tax cuts for the rich" plan that they are demanding, and we can't blame the House who are simply throwing a few bones to the Republican badger corral. Obama says it is Congress' fault because it hasn't passed any of the jobs bills that are in his own party's tent. Yeah, Obama would have been happy to have a couple of the jobs bills that were in his party's tent pass if it meant getting the country out of the 'fiscal cliff' mess he has created. This is the same "president" who has demanded that the opposition party just sit down, shut up and do nothing while he does everything he has not been allowed to do with the help of the Republican controlled House and Senate. Obama's plan to just ignore this failure has now moved from the comment section to his lame-stream press.Q: What happens when a user dismisses a dialog with a dialog or cancel button? I have a dialog that has a Ok button and a Cancel button. The user has the ability to edit certain values within the dialog itself before clicking either one of the button. My question is what happens to these editable values? Are they saved for use elsewhere when the dialog closes? Or are they automatically deleted? A: Normally, c6a93da74d
