The primary efficacy endpoints were the change in the GFR at each time point and the proportion of patients who reached a 25% reduction in eGFR at the end of the study period. In this study, onabotulinumtoxinA was well tolerated and no safety signals were observed. Further analysis indicated that the reduction in eGFR was significantly greater in the treatment arm and persisted for over 12 months. Hegde et al^[@bibr14-1179573519872727] prospectively evaluated the effect of onabotulinumtoxinA on GFR decline in patients with LUTS secondary to BPH. A total of 120 patients were randomized to either the onabotulinumtoxinA treatment group (100 units) or the placebo group (control) group. Patients in the treatment arm received a total of 4 injections of onabotulinumtoxinA into the prostatic lobes at 2-week intervals. The primary endpoint was the decline in renal function from baseline to 12 months after completion of the study. Secondary endpoints included the change in serum creatinine, the change in eGFR, the change in PSA levels and the change in IPSS from baseline to 12 months after completion of the study. This study included patients with BPH who required c6a93da74d
